Voice of the Martyrs

While India's constitution guarantees religious freedom, and conversion is not illegal, Christian converts often face social ostracism, physical violence, and false criminal charges. Kumar, a resident of the Punjab region, became a Christian in 2003 when he was 23 years old. Even though family members rejected Kumar's choice, violent reactions did not occur until 2024 when four men attacked him with swords because he left Sikhism to follow Jesus. He protected his head with his hands and bears many scars. His wife and brother rushed to help him and were also attacked. Three hospitals refused to treat their wounds. Finally, a Christian hospital accepted them. Despite the attack and ongoing threats, Pastor Kumar continues his ministry. Underground house churches continue to grow across Punjab. New believers meet in small groups, sharing meals and studying Scripture together. The church in Punjab doesn't boast grand buildings or public displays. It flourishes in the unwavering faith of believers who count the cost and still choose to follow Jesus. Pastor Kumar says, "If I live, I live for God. If I die, I die for God." Please be steadfast in prayer for these courageous Christians, our brothers and sisters.
